

ONE DAY EVENT

11 AM TO 8 PM CRANSTON STORE ONLY

Tornado Hits Warehouse of GENUINE

SWAROVSKI CRYSTAL

Collectibles Crafted in Austria

IT NEVER HAPPENED BEFORE...
(AS FAR AS IT PROBABLY WILL NEVER HAPPEN AGAIN)

For the first time in our 47.6 year history, we are able to offer Swarovski merchandise... A tornado damaged the roof of their warehouse and the insurance company paid the claim. DON'T MISS THIS EVENT!

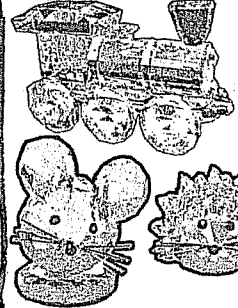

WHAT ABOUT CONDITION? The merchandise is perfect... any sign of damage at all is that on some of the boxes there's some dust, maybe a wrinkle, nothing very major... but the insurance co. collects premiums on millions worth of Swarovski merchandise... They probably paid the claim just because it was good business.

To counter Gingrich, Romney shifts strategy

After losing his front-runner status, candidate makes himself more available

By CHARLES BABINGTON

WASHINGTON — Mitt Romney's above-the-fray campaign style kept him atop the Republican presidential field for months, but it's raising concerns among his supporters now that Newt Gingrich has surged to challenge him.

Some Romney backers say their candidate must mix it up more aggressively, with Gingrich and with reporters, to prove he has the moxie to be the GOP challenger to President Obama. Romney, the former Massachusetts governor, particularly caused concerns with his prickly responses in a recent Fox News interview. He needs to show more toughness and willingness to field questions, party insiders say.

The message seemed to resonate with his campaign Tuesday. Romney said he will appear on Fox News Sunday on Dec. 18, his first national Sunday talk show in nearly two years. He also fielded questions from reporters covering his Arizona visit, marking his third such "press availability" in four days.

The announcement came the same day as a CBS News/New York Times poll showed Gingrich with a double-digit lead over Romney among Republican caucusgoers in Iowa.

The poll, conducted from Nov. 30 to Dec. 5, shows Gingrich with 31 percent support to Romney's 17 percent. Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas, was third with 16 percent.

Mitt Romney, left, in Paradise Valley, Ariz., Tuesday was endorsed by former Vice President Dan Quayle.

Numerous Romney supporters had expressed concern over reports of him dodging reporters and in-depth questioning.

"It remains a mystery why Mitt Romney has done relatively few interviews," Jennifer Rubin, a conservative blogger for The Washington Post who often praises Romney, wrote on Monday. The much-discussed Nov. 29 Fox interview, she said, might have gone better "had it been one of dozens of TV interviews he'd given during the campaign. ... He's been the least-interviewed candidate in the race."

In his 15-minute exchange with Fox News' Brett Baier, Romney bristled at questions about his changed views on abortion, climate change, immigration and gay rights, all of which are widely discussed in political circles.

Romney acknowledged rejecting his pro-abortion-rights stand of the 1990s, although he did not explain why. Otherwise, he told Baier, "Your list is just not accurate." Romney suggested ed the question spired by "Dem that label him a flopper."

Asked about chlamydia health which required obtain medical Romney said "I answered the question hundreds of times." "This is an urban myth."

The question of those the stream news would ask, wild or oddball question. On Tuesday he hinted he might up his criticism.

"I will not tell Cavuto. 'Sir, rich is a friend. But we have very life experiences."

Romney said spent the past 4 in Washington, an insider. "Romney only elected four years as a governor, say, bringing a more experienced, outside
